Another Disaster Ahead? Earlier this year, Japanese scientists from the Kobe Ocean Bottom Exploration Center discovered a massive lava dome 30 miles from the southern tip of Japan's main southern island of Kyushu. The dome stands 2,000 feet high, has a diameter of six miles and currently sits just 100 feet below the ocean's surface. The dome is immense and contains nearly eight cubic miles of magma. Were it to erupt, it would cover nearly the whole island of Japan with eight inches of ash and kill up to 100 million people (New York Times, February 9, 2018; Telegraph, February 12, 2018). This lava dome is just one of many volcanic features on the "Ring of Fire" that encircles the Pacific Ocean. In 2004, an undersea earthquake occurred 100 miles off the coast of Sumatra. As the fourth largest earthquake ever recorded, this 9.1 magnitude quake sparked additional quakes as far away as Alaska. It also created tsunamis as high as 100 feet, killing more than 200,000 people. Some of the tsunamis traveled across the Indian Ocean to South Africa, over 5,000 miles away! (twnews&prophecy.com 11/2)
